

The Harbor Library — Reading Room

Tall windows ran the length of the north wall, and the morning light fell in long bars across the oak tables. A clerk wheeled a cart of returned volumes between the stacks, re-shelving each by its faded spine label while the radiators ticked and settled in the cold.

Field Notes — Coastal Survey (landscape)

The tide charts were spread edge to edge across the wide table, and a grease pencil rolled toward the seam every time the boat heeled over. We logged the depth soundings in a column down the right margin, then sketched the shoal line in the broad space the landscape sheet gave us.

The Repair Workshop — Inventory

Hand planes hung in a neat row above the bench, sorted from the heavy jointer down to a thumb-sized block plane. A jar of brass screws sat beside the vise, and the floor was swept clean of shavings save for a single curl that had drifted under the lathe and stayed there for weeks.